The Zillow Home Value Index (a website that estimates the current value of homes) has reported that prices have hit bottom and finally are bouncing back nationwide. Home values rose 0.2% year-over-year during the second quarter, first increase since 2007. Prices were up 2.1% from the first quarter. In another report, Standard & Poor's Case-Shiller Index, (another home value index) shows that home prices in 20 major markets are up 1.3% in April, the first increase in seven months.

"We have a lot to celebrate, indeed," says Emilio J Cardenal Broker/Executive Director of Interinvestments Realty. "The housing market picture is rosier now, as homeowners are growing back equity!"

"Rebounding home prices are lowering the number of homeowners that are considered 'underwater' on their mortgages, which means owing more in their mortgage balance than their homes are worth," continues Cardenal. "The drops on the for-sale inventory and distressed sales have contributed to increased property values."

"The housing recovery is holding together despite lower-than-expected job growth, indicating that the Foreign buyer continues to play a strong role in the housing market," finishes Cardenal.

As the market continues to trend upward and Interinvestments Realty is ready to better serve the necessities of their clients.
